FROM THE SPIRIT OF SEVENTY-S IX.

Letter to Thomas Jefferson, cidevant Pre-

Retired from public business into the shades of your beloved Monticello, your mind is at ease, to contemplate the influence of your councils on the destinies of your country. Nothing can be more faverable than your present situation to such a view. In retirement the passions lese that ardor which disturbs the accuracy of the reasoning power. Reflection there disenchants objects of that deceitful lustre that attracts in the hurry of the transactions of life. The man who has not enlarged his understanding and settled his principles in retreat can never appear on the theatre of public life with credit and distinction. The passions heated and inflamed the chace of honors, never suffer the understanding to acquire that solidity which forms the leading feature of every great mind. It is the same when choice leads, or disappointment forces the statesman into retirement. The bustle of men and things settles down into the calm of philosophy. Then comes the voice of an approving conscience and whispers those gratulations, the sweetest that a virtuous mind can know. All that he has left behind him in the tract of ambition is as dust. The pomp and peagantry of office disappear, and the mind strong in its own integrity, shines out with a majesty that the gilded drapery of power would only

One self-approving hour whole years out-

Of senseless clamors and of loud huzzas And more true joy Marcellus exiled feels Than Casar with the senate at his heels.

If then, sir, as a philosopher, you have effects, let me ask in reviewing your administration, if you have felt those consolations which have power to disarm the reproaches of enemies and to blunt the arrows of invective? Are there but few if any acts of your administration on which you can recall with pleasure to your mind? Throughout the desart tract of your politics, is there a genial spot on which the moral eye can res; with satisfaction? Have you strength. ened the foundations of the liberties; have you augmented the opulence ; have you altered the character of the people ; or, have you prepared the causes of their future greatness and prosperity? No. But have given a futal shock to their lib you have degraded their character, and along with a beggared exchequer, have handed over to your successor, the sprinciples of a ruinous policy. You began by saving the people's money, and you ended by leaving them in beggary. One was tempted to think that you had studied in the sordid school of Diogenes; so far did you carry your ideas of political abstemiousness. It was this saving spirit that made you destroy the naval defence of your country. In the zenith of your political economy, sir, we find the cause of those injuries and indignities which our national honor has sustained.

I need not remind you, sir, that the af fair of the Chesapeake, that rankling wound which perhaps has set perpetual disunion between this country and Great Britain, is to be ascribed to your policy, which did not foresee that to be respected it is necessary to be feared. I do not say we might suddenly have a maritime force capable of mastering the triumphant feets of Britain. But there was a time when this country did not want a band of martial virtues to atrengthen and adorn that navy which has ingloriously perished under your parsimonious administration. There is an elasticity in republicanism calculated to lift the soul to the most daring height of energy and heroism. Let the march of our little army across the desarts of Barra-Let the well fought action at Tripeli bear testimeny how much a handful of freeman can stehieve, when opposed to armies of slaves.

I henor the lively patriotism of those gentlemen, who have raised a memorial to the face of their brother officers who gal-house of their country. But I blush for that country, when I am told that this me-nument was the result of private bounty.—

But why do I mention this? The grave of Washington lies undistinguished; on whose ashes Athens would have raised her temples, and Rome would have built the citadel of her empire. But he lives in the affections of his countrymen. You have expended a portion of the public treasures in purchasing territory, in annexing to your country New Orleans, that focus of sedition and revolt. Had even this sum instead of ministering to the desolating ambition of a foreign tyrant, been applied to the repair and conservation of our little maritime force, we should not now have to stoop with submission to our injuries, nor should we have had the mortification of seeing one of the dearest articles in the charter of freedom violated by the mandates of a military satrap. Allow me sir, to cite to you the sentiments of a great and wise man" on the subject of economy .--" Economy is a distributive virtue, and consists not in saying, but selection. Parsimony requires no providence, no sagacity, no powers of combination, no comparison, no judgment." Allow instinct, and that an instinct not of the noblest kind, may produce this false economy in perfection, the other economy has larger and more refined views. It demands a discriminating judgment, and a firm, sagacious mind: It shuts one door to impudent importunity, only to open another and a wider to unpresuming merit. If none but meritorious services or real talents were to be rewarded, this nation has not wanted and this mation will not want the means of rewarding all the services it ever will receive, and encouraging all the merit it ever will produce. No state since the foundation of society has been impoverished by that species of profusion. In saying money, I soon can count all the good I do; but when by a cold penury I blast the abilities of a nation and stunt the growth of its active energies, the ill I may do, is beyond calculation. You commenced your political career by pulling down with a quadrimanous activity what the wisdom of your predecessors had built up. Sir, it is an easy thing to pull down. Fury and incapacity may in one day destroy more than the wisdom of ages can erect. No sooner were you seated in the presidential chair than you invaded the sanctity of that tribunal on which the fate of our liberties is suspended. Every institution was in danger of falling before the fury of your partisans. I sp not of the quality and nature of the changes they effected. Their Briarean hands would have demolished alike the useful and the bad. It was not, sir, the large and liberal conceptions of a statesman, but the narrow spirit of levelling, that led you to mark with disapprobation every measure of the federal administration. You came reeking from the school of Condorcet, and would have instituted in this country that beautiful series of experiments by which the philosophers of France so illustriously benifitted theirs. You would have taught us to imitate the sanguinary excesses of that people until some chief like Bonaparte arese to chain down the spirit of revolt. We can remember the insolence of France supported and encouraged by your party, which only the inflexible virtue and unshaken integrity of Washington could express. Under his auspices we escaped the baneful centagion of her revolutionary politics. -But you, sir, have almost rendered nugatory the exertions of that great man, by enslaving us to her will, now that she is armed with the power and arrayed fin the pomp of despotism. But I encourage the hope that Americans will not tamely surrender their liberties. The spirit of '76, which resisted the illegal claims of a British ministry, will contend for the altar of freedom against the banditti of Gaul. But other principles than those of your temporizing successor will be called forth by the event. With our swords we purchased our liberties, and with ouf swords we must defend them. The memory of that man whom you have labored to dishoner, will inspire the bosom of my countrymen.-Mappy America if she had still continued to make his precepts, his virtues and his examples, the base of her republic. But you know how they all have been set aside, and by what art your wretched policy has triumphed over his wise and magnanimous lessons. It was for this you rewarded every creature that had been branded with his displeasure. It was for this you honored the miscreant Duane with the epaulets of an American officer. But when you, sir, along with Duane and every vena libeller shall be forgotten; when the proud dome of the capital shall have fallen, the name of Washington will survive; for it will be engraven on the hearts of the virtuous and good. A plain

Your has herself become the viction of resistless public conduct has corresponded with the despotism. A despotism that is leading principles of your character and understanding. Too cowardly to resent the insults of your country abroad, you never wanted courage to invade its liberties at home. Under your baneful torch the constitution of your country has pined away, and cannot be renovated by any remedy short of a total expulsion of your party from power. The constitution of the United States is the result of the wisdom of past ages, and not the crude and unfinished offspring of theoreteric politics. It consists of separately constituted authorities, over the integrity of which the people are to keep a constant and unremitting watch. When this fair system becomes corrupt; when the parts of which it consists harmonize with the purposes of a single man, the shadow remains—but the spirit of liberty is fled. This fair system, sir, you have endeavored to corrupt; for the decrees of its power have hung upon your nod. You the Pacific and leave us too to the horrid obtained by factious influence the complete | night of despotism. subscrviency of that body to your views .--You have united against freedom those powers which the framers of the constitution wisely partitioned out in its defence. Every symptom of morbid weakness and strength was apparent on the face of your administration. At one time the springs of government were so relaxed that we might properly have been said to have no government at all; at another they were animated beyond the tone of civil despotism. Is there nothing criminal in having thus corrupted one of the fairest systems of policy which human wisdom has directed? Is it of no consequence that you have left the pernicious fruits of conduct along with the still more pernicious effects of your example to your successor; and that you have devolved on him the odious task of accomplishing, by one act, that scheme which your genius had the hardihood to conceive? A war with England would realize the hopes of your party, and fix the destinies of this country forever. It would lead to the establishment of a powerful military force, the suspension of some of our most sacred laws, the dissolution of morals and consequent submission to Bonaparte "When I contemplate the character of this man, his immeasurable resources for war, and the genius and promptitude with which he conceives and executes the most stupendous schemes of ambition, I tremble for my country." This gilted serpent has long cast upon us these glances with which he first fascinates in order afterwards to devour. The subtle Bonaparte ministers to these corrupt affections more fatal to republics than invading armies. He first violates the chastity of the struggling half consenting victims, and then with his ruffian daggar he stifles at once the voice and remembrance of the pollution. Every noxions animal that a corrupt state of manners produces is searched for; all the explosive materials that a new and crude state of society engenders, are prepared in unguarded momenta for the subversion of your liberties. Under various disguises lurk the secret foes of our country. Under many specious appearances of patriotism burn the hot and intemperate fires of ambition. These are not the hair brain fancies of an alarmed and unquiet imagination. They are irresistible conclusions from known facts. What do I say? They contain the history of the last sixteen years. Sir, it is an age of revolutions in which we live. Power and domi-

From your hostility to this nation, about the existence of which the fates of your own country are indissolubly entwined, have flowed all the pernicious measures which have nearly surrendered our freedom to France. Bonaparte shall no sooner have cloven down the liberties of Great Britain, than be will turn indignantly upon the American republics and trample them out of existence. I need hardly insist on the motives that will urge him to our destruction. Apprehensions that our existence may prove fatal to the repose of his successors, will dissuade him from permitting us ever to become a great and powerful people. He knows that free governments are the nurseries of enterprize and talent. That from the bosom of republics have sprung those prodigies of genius and valor that have chastised the insolence of tyrants. The sword that cut down the Persian monarchy was forged in a Grecian Republic. The Romans, a free people, overrun and subjugated the whole world, and when Rome lost her freedom and sunk in the languor of despotism, it was the free and untained barbarians of the north that dismantled her of her glory .-Bonaparte himself sprung out of the jarring elements of tumultuous democracy. But enough of this.

New, sir, along with the freedom I have taken in addressing to you an epiade, I have pressed you with some warmth-But it is a warmth inspired by affection for my country. I conclude in the words of one whose language and sentiments gave dignity to his subject. " I do not pretend to understand those prudent forms of decorum, those gentle rules of discretion, which some men endeavor to unite with conduct of the greatest and most hazardous affairs. Engaged in defence of an honorable cause, I would take a decisive part. I should scorn to provide for a future retrest, or keep terms with a man who preserved no measures with the public. Neither the abject submission of deserting his post in the hour of danger, nor even the sacred shield of cowardice should protect him. I would pursue him through life and try the last exertions of my abilities to preserve the perishable infamy of his name and make it

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21.

When the deadly aim of the ruthless murbree has consigned to the tomb, a citizen umbining in his own character the hero, the partiot and the profound statesman, it would reasonably be expected that the community who had been benefitted by his talents and services, would in their lamentations for his oss, cast the weil of charity over his errors, and that party heat and personal animosiies, would be buried with their victim in he silent grave. - But also, no! the sacred just must be re murdered through the bosome of those it held most dear while liv-

These reflections have arisen from an atention to the proceedings of Congress,upon he petition of the widow of the martyred Hamilton. Such an obstinate, persevering. malignant, rancorous opposition, to a claim, noderate, and in itself evidently just, we have never before witnessed. Such a fiendike persinacity could have arisen alone from passions, which are a disgrace at once to uman nature and the individuals who cheish them. Is it not enough that the bones f Hamilton are mouldering into dust, huried to a premature grave by the hands of a niscreant and an outcast murderer? Must he spirit of revenge and persecution pursue o destruction all who bear his name and wn his blood? We trust not. We trust here is yet integrity enough in Congress o do justice to the family of a brave and aithful servant. We cannot close this arcle without declaring our warm applause the manty and honorable conduct of Mr. ohnson, and some other democratic genlemen. They have done their duty nobly despite of the howlings of malignity and evenge. The approbation of their own earts must be their great reward.

The worm at the root. - Independent merica, in one respect, stands alone in the earth; it is the only republic in the known world. Hence its destiny is of more general interest to mankind, than that perhaps of any other nation; there dependng upon it the happiness or wretchedness of unborn millions, as well as of millions now living. The foundations of our republican institutions were laid, under peculiar advantages, and by men of singular wisdom, integrity and patriotism. As no other nation ever had so many and so great advantages for establishing a free republian government, so no one else has been avored with such means of preversing and perpetuating republican institutions, If republic succeed, for a series of ages, correspondently to the wishes and views of its founders, it will show to the world that ocieties of men are capable of establishing free and excellent government from reection and choice, and of supporting it in pite of the intrigues tof knavery and facion. It will exhibit a great and salutary xample to mankind, an example which eentually may-be followed by other large pertions of people in different parts of the world. But, on the other hand, if the great experiment that is making in this country should fail, there would be no encouragement left for others to try it; as no ther nation probably will be better situated, or combine more advantages for the stablishment and maintenance of republican institutions -or, if ever, not till several generations of men shall have passed away, t is almost certain, that if this republic should be uprooted, a long reign of despotism would ensue.

As a writer of deep sagacity, an eminent tatesman of our own country, long since renarked, " History will teach us-that of those men who have overturned the liberties of republica, the greatest number have be-

The their career by Baying an obse court to the people, commencing dema-gogues and ending tyrants." Julius Court, rance in that corporation under its original Cromwell, Bousparte, and scores of others. form, remain members of it under the preof less nate, first beguiled the people by their flatteries, and at last bound them with the shackles of slavery .- So fell most of the Grecian republics, and perhaps most of the free republics that have ever existed in the mining this point was affirmed with costs. world.

Will people never be wise? Will they shut their eyes to the light of history, and their ears to the voice of experience? Will they refuse to receive instruction even from their own dear-bought experience? Notwithstanding the warning voice of history, the admonitions of our wises and best men, and our singular advantages for correct political conduct, the great American republic has of late been travelling fast in the broad road to despotism and ruin. A willing ear has been given to the flatteries of crafty demagogues. How vaunting were their promises! How pitiful their performance! They promised a greater share of civil rights and political freedom. Look at their deeds; the bill offered in the senate for suspending the privilege of habeas corpus, the enforcing act, the gag-rule, &c. &c.-Let these men have their way, and in a few years the people would be stripped of all their privileges. They promised economy anh the diffusion of general prosperity. What have they done? They have squandered the public monoy, they have destroyed an abundant revenue, they have exhausted a full treasury, they are compelled to borrow millions for the support of even a peace establishment. Like the lean kine, that came out of the river Nile, they have eaten up every thing : and yet continue lean and hungry. Only compare this country as it was when these men first came into power, and as it is now. The contrast is astonishing.

We have arrived at an alarming crisis; and nothing under heaven can save us from plunging into the worst kind of despotism, but the good sense and patriotism of the people at large : in them we still have confidence. They will not, much longer, persevere in an erroneous opinion respecting their own interests; they will not continue blind to the wicked arts of demagogues .-The state of New York is awaking out of a ten years' trance. The current of public opinion is changing fast, in various : parts of the union. "Truth is great, and will

FRENCH WAR.

The following and the article from Marbleheari, corroborate the late intelligence from Bordeaux and Gijon of a general seizure of our property in France.

Captain Josiah Pratt, of the brig Pocahoptas, of New-York, captured on her voyage from Tonningen, and carried into Boulogne, writes to his consignees thus-" Off the mouth of the English Channel, I was boarded by a privateer, treated politely and suffered to proceed. Soon after, I was boarded by three small French boats, who took the brig into Boulogne, put myself and crew into prison, would not allow me to speak to any one, or to have pen, ink or paper. After being imprisoned some days, was suffered to proceed to an inland town, where I was permitted to have pen, int land

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY March 19.

[CONCLUDED.] [Taken for the Alexandria Gazette.]

After Mr. Key's amendment was passed, the question recurred on passing the bill to a third reading. Mr. Josely was opposed to the bill generally. He thought this measure was intended to fit both war and peace, and therefore not exactly suited to miher. He said we had lately an extraordinary propensity to novel projects. If we are to have a pavy it must be unlike all other navies. We must have some ships to fight on the water-torpedoes to fight under water, and gun boats to fight by land or water, as occasion may require. Now we are about to have an army-gentlemen who are in favor of the bill mad not yet told us what kind of a force this is, which is contemplated by the bill. It is militia—it is a regular army—the men are volunteers or volunteer militia, or as some gentlemen have told us they are like he old fashioned minute men of the revolution. He was opposed to such kind of armies, especially as there was at present no necessity of an army of any kind.

Mr. Pierson made a very luminous and able speech against the bill. He stated that this experiment would cost the U. States, at least, two million of dollars, without the slightest prospect of benefit.

Mr. Emmott moved to amend the bill by the following proviso. Provided, that the volunteers so raised shall not exceed twenty thousand.

The question on this amendment was taken by ayes and noes, and lost. Ayes 38-noes 70.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading to-morrow, and the house, at a late hour adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 20.

Mr. Clay offered a resolution which was adopted to instruct the post-master-general to give information respecting the post route to N. Orleans by Athens in Georgia. This resolution had for its object to obtain more particular information on the subject than was contemplated by the resolution of Mr. Stanford, passed some days since.]

Mr. Stanley reported a bill for the relief of John Carr. The bill was read twice and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ORIGINAL FAMILY MEDICINES

Prepared by RICHARD LEE & SON. Have been in high estimation and general use throughout the United States, for upwards of ten years. And, it is no incensiderable evidence of their utility, that during the above period, numerous imitations of every article, the productions of ignorance and experience, urged by enry and penury, have been intruded on the public, seen for a day, and then perished! Others now succeed them, which in like manner are fast descend-ng to the tomb of the Capulets; while our remedies become more generally used, and acquire a daily accession of deserved celebri-

Lee's Worm-destroying Lozenges. This medicine is superior to any ver offered to the public, being innocent and mild certain and efficacious in its operations.-Should no worms exist in the body, it will without pain or griping, cleanse the stomach and bowels of whatever is foul or offensive, and thereby prevent the production of worms and many fatal disorders.

Lee's Elexer.

A certain remedy for colds, coughs, asthmas, and particularly the whooping cough, se destructive to children.

Lee's Essence of Mustard, So well known for the cure of rheumatirms, gout, palsy, sprains, &c. &c.
